SUNDANCE FILM FESTIVAL

Weinstein returns to fest on film

'Untouchable' airs his victims' stories

Patrick Ryan USA TODAY

PARK CITY, Utah — Harvey Weinstein is back at Sundance, only this time, he's not the one calling the shots.

The disgraced movie mogul is the subject of a new documentary that premiered Friday at the mountainside film festival, where activist Rose McGowan says he raped her more than 20 years ago.

Although McGowan herself does not appear in "Untouchable," the movie features nearly a dozen other testimonies from women who have accused Weinstein of sexual assault, including actresses Rosanna Arquette and Paz de la Huerta, who have been at the forefront of the #MeToo movement. Other stories are less familiar, such as that of Hope Exiner d'Amore, who says Weinstein raped her in a hotel room in the 1970s while he was working as a concert promoter.

"Untouchable" offers no new incriminating details about Weinstein, who recently tapped Casey Anthony's and Kobe Bryant's lawyers for an upcoming sexual assault case in New York. And while the film is perfectly content to rehash the work of Roman Farrow and other journalists who helped take Weinstein down, that in no way diminishes the power of seeing his alleged victims emotionally recount their experiences on camera, some for the first time.

The most fascinating bits of the film are interviews with former Miramax employees, who offer a window into what it was like to work under Weinstein at the since-shuttered distributor behind Oscar winners including "Shakespeare in Love" and "The English Patient." Their boss' sex life was shrugged off as mere water-cooler gossip, and everyone had horror stories about his infamous temper — the most petulant tantrum was captured by a journalist, when Weinstein called himself the "(expletive) sheriff of this (expletive) town."

Most of all, they have complicated feelings about their time at Miramax. While Weinstein's former colleagues give him credit for his marketing genius and advancing their careers, they also feel guilty that he destroyed so many others for his victims.

If there's one interview director Ursula Macfarlane wishes she could've gotten for "Untouchable," it would've been Weinstein himself.

"We would've loved Harvey to be in the film so he could answer to these allegations and tell us about himself," Macfarlane said at a post-screening Q&A. After he declined their request, they resorted to using voiceovers pulled from his past interviews. "It felt more dramatic than to just watch him in a news clip. There's something quite haunting about it, because his presence loomed large."

hit job" on Twitter Saturday.

In a statement to USA TODAY following Friday's premiere, Jackson's estate said that the project "Isn't a documentary, it is the kind of fabled character assassination Michael Jackson endured in life, and now in death. The film takes uncorroborated allegations that supposedly happened 20 years ago and treats them as fact. ... The two accusers testified under oath that these events never occurred."

"The statement goes on to say that Robson's assault allegations "suddenly emerged" when he "was denied a role in a Michael Jackson-themed Cirque du Soleil production."

Here are five allegations presented in "Neverland," which premiered on HBO this spring.

A lot of sexual activity alleged at ranch

Safesuck claims that Jackson introduced him to masturbation while staying together at a hotel in Paris. "He told me I was his first sexual experience," says Safesuck, adding that one morning, Jackson told him he performed oral sex on him while he was sleeping.

Robson alleges similar sexual encounters with Jackson when he would visit Neverland Ranch, and says the pop star kept a large cardboard cutout of Peter Pan in his bedroom, which he would often look at as he masturbated. Robson says that Jackson introduced him to porn and gave him alcohol.

He would allegedly run drills to avoid getting caught

At the start of their relationship, Safesuck alleges that Jackson would regularly test him on how quickly he could get out of his clothes as quietly as possible. He also had multiple locks and thick wooden doors throughout Neverland Ranch, where Safesuck claims they had sex inside his castle, pool, attic and train station.

"It happened every day," Safesuck says. The manipulation reminded the boys that they could never share anything about what they did. "If anyone ever found out that we were doing these sexual things, we would go to jail for the rest of our lives," Robson recalls him saying, "I was terrified."

Jackson allegedly staged a mock wedding

Years into their relationship, which lasted until he was 14, "we were like this married couple," Safesuck said. There was one day when Jackson suggested they hold a mock ceremony at his condo, where they allegedly exchanged "vows" and he gifted the boy with a diamond-encrusted gold ring.

Wade Robson claims he was ordered to throw out his underwear

After moving to LA to focus on dancing and to be closer to Jackson, Robson was devastated to learn that the singer had "moved on" to other boys including Mecauley Culkin and Brett Baran (both of whom have denied that Jackson sexually abused them).

"There was jealousy from me," Robson says.

After a few years of occasional encounters, the singer allegedly summoned a then-14-year-old Robson to his hotel room, where he had sex with the teen. The next day, Robson says Jackson called him demanding that he get rid of his underwear from the night before, in fear that Robson's mother would discover it. It was the last sexual experience they had together.

Jackson allegedly said Presley relationship 'didn't mean anything'

Leading up to his short-lived marriage to Lisa Marie Presley in 1994, Jackson would try to comfort Safesuck by telling him that he "had to have public relationships with women" but "it wouldn't mean anything," Safesuck says. The manipulation continued as they got older, as Jackson allegedly pressured both men to testify in 2005 that he never sexually abused them after he was charged with molesting 13-year-old Gavin Arvizo. Although Safesuck declined, Robson agreed to appear in court, citing an obligation to support his lifelong friend. Robson continued to defend Jackson three years later in an interview with Access Holly-
